About

A terraced house among others, with its facades bearing traces of economic and social changes.

The project involves the integration of an architecture studio and a dwelling.

The converted house is clad in perforated rusty steel playing with the colors of the place.

To the passerby, the perforations create a set of transparency that lets him guess the original character of the building. For residents, they offer a new intimacy and identity.

The stainless steel sheets make the siding reversible and recyclable.

Thus, each time can revert to what it was.
